

Celebrate the whole world in London

New photographic exhibition showcases the extraordinary diversity of London's communities

From 12th to 30th November 2009 at London's City Hall, a stunning new photographic exhibition celebrates the amazing cultural and religious diversity of London.

Let's Celebrate 365 is the result of photographer Jeremy Hunter's life-long fascination with the extraordinary rituals, faiths and traditions of the world – many of which are represented in London.

Supported by The Mayor of London, Let's Celebrate 365 features huge and impactful images – from the brightly painted faces of the Hindu Janmashtami Festival in Watford, to colourful Dzogchen monks and Orthodox Jews.

Taking place around National Inter-Faith Week – a new initiative from the Department for Communities and Local Government (DCLG) and the Inter Faith Network for the UK – Let's Celebrate 365 provides visitors with a truly uplifting experience.

Recently recognised with a UNESCO award, Jeremy Hunter's photographic collection is a unique and comprehensive documentation of the huge variety of festivals, rituals and celebrations around the world and in London – many of which are unknown and unseen by other Londoners.

'Let's Celebrate 365 provides visitors with the opportunity to journey, explore, learn, and – most importantly – better understand our world and its people,' says Jeremy Hunter.

Praise for Jeremy Hunter's photography:

'Wonderful pictures! What a diverse world we live in.'

'Incredible exhibition'

'Quite astonishing images – thank you'

'Great explanations – thanks'

About Jeremy Hunter

Jeremy Hunter's passion for photography began during his time as a journalist; first based in Tehran as a foreign correspondent for NIRTV and later travelling the world interviewing politicians, activists and heads of state. During this time, Jeremy began documenting local festivals, rituals, pilgrimages and celebrations. Soon he had created a unique photographic collection and, with research advice from anthropologists and local indigenous groups, this passion has become his life's work. Let's Celebrate 365 is the result.

The Let's Celebrate 365 exhibition will be in The Mayor's Office, City Hall (SE1 2AA) from 12th to 30th November 2009. Free entry.

For more information, press images, or to interview Jeremy Hunter, please contact Alexander Martin at Midas Public Relations on 020 7361 7860 or e-mail alexander.martin@midaspr.co.uk